Good evening! As someone who tries to always see the good in everything and the glass half full, I would like to point out and say thanks to our Highway Superintendent, Tony Coviello and his staff for a fine job on the work done to Furnace and Dorn Roads. If you haven't driven on those roads, you should. The work was well done...so again, thanks. I felt this was something to be noted because often, it is the negative stuff that gets cranked about while the good stuff often doesn't even get mentioned.

In addition and keeping with the glass half full and trying to see the good in 'everything', I am noting here that while I don't go on FB, a friend sent me a posting from FB that was a long dissertation and criticism of those running against the current board. In addition to the comments was a comic depicting our current Town Clerk, Laureen as "Lazy Laureen" and our Highway Super, Tony Coviello as "No-show Tony". First off, neither was comical and certainly not true, but more importantly, I would like to thank whoever wrote it because you showed your true colors and it clearly was a bitter last-ditch effort, not to mention juvenile, to attempt to discredit these two elected positions. I believe the primary was a clear indication of who and what our town's people are looking for despite the fact that this TB doesn't listen or act on the majority's behalf. Clearly the thinking and desires of our town's voters isn't in line with the thinking of those who wrote such trash and the few who agree with that FB posting. Do you really think that such negativity is a true reflection on those depicted? News flash, it is a highly visible reflection on the author(s).

Generally, it is not legitimate for an outgoing town board to include themselves in the following year's committee work in New York. Once their term on the board has expired, their authority ends. Their replacement is responsible for making appointments for the new year. However, if a town board member is re-elected, they can serve on a committee.

Committee appointment process in New York

- The new Town Board makes appointments: In New York, the current town board has the authority to fill appointive positions, including committee memberships. Once a new town board is sworn in, they have the power to appoint and supervise all boards and committees.
- Advisory committees can include citizens: New York town boards can appoint citizen committees to advise them on particular matters, but these committees are advisory only. While membership on these advisory committees can include members of existing boards, a former board member would need to be appointed by the new board.
- Qualifications and potential for reappointment: Any individual, including a former town board member, who meets the qualifications for public office (such as being a US citizen and a resident) is eligible to serve on a committee, assuming the committee does not have stricter requirements. However, this requires a fresh appointment by the new town board.
- Resignation from the board for specific appointments: In some cases, a member of the town board who wants to be appointed to fill a vacancy in a town office must resign from the board before being appointed. This procedure illustrates the separation between a board member's role and other town offices.

Key takeaways for legitimacy

- Authority is temporary: An outgoing town board does not retain authority to make appointments for the future, as its power ceases at the end of its term.
- New appointments are needed: For an outgoing board member to serve on a committee in the new year, they would need to be reappointed by the newly constituted board.
- Action by formal resolution: Any legal committee or board must be created and appointed by a formal resolution of the town board. If an outgoing board attempted to set future committee appointments, it would likely be challenged and overturned by the incoming board.
